Cultural Heritage New Technologies Creativity

February | March | April | May 2013

The application of the new technologies to the historical research presents itself as a unique opportunity for the advancement and optimization of the latter.

Through the use of interactive 3D models and, more recently, virtual worlds technology it is possible to recreate lost urban realities (in their physical, social and cultural dimensions) allowing a very particular visit to the memory of the past. Not only historical research is being developed according to an innovative and increasingly singular methodology, but also the object of study is gaining new contours and concomitantly other appropriations, scientific, pedagogical or merely entertaining.

This seminar seeks to promote scientific interchange in the area of virtual heritage, especially with regard to the historical recreation of urban environments. It also aims at creating the basis for of an interdisciplinary and international online network of experts in the field such as researchers, companies, universities and research institutions worldwide.
